Don't Be a Paleface

By Betty Clarke,
AP Beauty Editor.

It took years for women to realize the importance of foundation cream and the proper blending of cream and powder for a glorified make-up.

Today, there are so many foundations, make-up bases and face masks at the toiletries counters that no girl need walk around with an undressed face.

In recent years there has been a definite trend toward the mask type make-up. These cake and liquid make-ups are preferred in many instances because one can select a shade and be sure it will be the same when applied to the skin. This isn't always true of a foundation cream, which depends often on the shade of powder to heighten the color.

Cake make-up which is applied with a water soaked sponge has enjoyed a

rage for several years, though some persons believe that it causes a drying effect upon certain type skins if used constantly.

There are also many liquid powder make-ups. A new creamy liquid make-up which has made its debut has an oil base which gives added protection to sensitive skin. All you do is apply a few drops of it with your fingertips and you have transformed an otherwise pale skin into one glowing with healthy color. Freckle faces will welcome it, too.

It can be applied speedily, giving a professional make-up in a few seconds. Though it can be used without powder for a healthy outdoor effect, the addition of powder helps to give a petal smooth, finished look. The shades range from rose rachel for very fair skins to Brazilian, a deep coppery tint to blend with your own skin tone or to achieve a pseudo sun tan.

Dorothy Dix Says---

TIME AND ABSENCE HEAL LOVE

DEAR MISS DIX—I have been married six years and until recently my husband, who is in the Navy, seemed happy and contented, but lately he has decided he is in love with a girl he knew before he did me, and she insists upon his getting a divorce and marrying her. He doesn't want to do this.

All three of us involved in this triangle are 30 years of age. What should I do?

A BROKEN-HEARTED WIFE.

Husband Must Wait.

Answer—Tell your husband that you want him to be happy and that you do not intend to be a dog in the manger and that if after he returns from the war he feels that he loves this other woman better than he does you, that you will step quietly out of the picture, but that you are not going to do it now. Tell him he will have to wait to choose between you and the Other Woman until he has had plenty of time to think the matter over and search his heart.

You say your husband is 30 years old. He is acting like a school boy, not knowing his own mind. You will be doing him a great favor by making him wait for a divorce, instead of handing him out one because a girl is persuading him that he wants her instead of you.

Perhaps in the long nights at sea, when he is alone with his own soul, he will grow up and get to be adult enough to at least know what he wants.

Dear Miss Dix—My husband will soon go into the army and I will have to get a job. That's all right. Neither of us wish to shirk our duty. But my parents and friends insist that I give up my lovely, comfortable apartment, store or sell my furniture, and go to live with either his family, or my family, or my sister.

I can't see it. I want to stay in my own place. I feel that I will miss my husband less there than anywhere else, and that it will be a comfort to him to know that his home is intact and waiting for him. What shall I do?

MARG.

Woman Should Keep Home Despite War.

Answer—I would say keep your own apartment. Stay in your apartment. Stay in your own house with your own things. Don't go to live with your family or your husband's family. The one means freedom and self-expression, having things the way you want them, doing the things you want to do. The other means that you are in bondage to the whims, caprices, tastes and habits of somebody else, and that you will have to give an account of your every move.

If you go back to live with your mother, she will treat you as if you were still 5 years old, and not bright at that. If you go to live with your husband's people, they will consider you an unwanted guest who has been wished upon them, and you will have just about as much liberty as a dog on a leash.

And a final word of warning. Never go to board with anyone who tells you they will treat you as a member of the family. They do. They never consider your taste, or your comfort, or your habits. They expect you to eat what they eat and do as they do, and like it.

Dear Dorothy Dix: Is it foolish for a man of 45 to still crave kisses? All my life I have been starved for kisses, but my wife doesn't get any kick out of them and tells me to be my age. Call kisses mushy or anything you like, but I think they are necessary for a happy married life.

LOVING HUSBAND.

Answer: Well, for goodness sake, if you are a kissing bug, why didn't you find out before marriage your girl's views on osculation, and whether she was a petter or a non-petter? Seems as if you might have noticed whether she turned her lips or the back of her ear to you when you kissed her.

Anyway, I don't think it is silly for a man of 45 to crave kisses from his wife. I think it is perfectly wonderful!

A Woman's New York

By ALICE HUGHES

Not long ago we wrote a piece about the professional cockiness of the United States Marine Corp, and the jealousy felt by many army units because of the publicity the leathernecks receive. Within the last few days an unusual wave of stories have been printed in the papers which wish that some combat groups and types of martial apparatus received more mention in the press at home. Strangest of the lot was one by the Washington writer, David Lawrence, pointing out that Marines made up the bulk of the fighters on Saipan—and why not say so?

Alice Hughes

Why, bless little Davy's heart, we've known since that battle started that two Marine divisions and one army outfit, our own state's 27th Division, fought that gory engagement, and everybody has said so incessantly. Davy doesn't know much, if anything about this war and the last if he's fretting his little head about the Marines not getting due credit for their gallant deeds. Up to now, four Marine Divisions have been identified in the Pacific branch of the war, and more than twice that many army divisions—but the great gyrenes have been sent into the toughest landing operations, such as Tarawa and Saipan, and their terrific feats have filled the first pages of all the newspapers in the country.

Also suddenly publicity-conscious is the fine Ninth Division, which fought fast and fiercely across the base of the Cherbourg peninsula and then helped capture the port. Ernie Pyle says the Ninth has been worried because it has not been properly played up at home, and has set up its own little press department to entertain and assist the visiting reporters. And William Philip Simms reports from the English Channel that a man on his Landing Ship Tank wonders why such craft don't get more mention. Why my gosh, I don't think any war apparatus save the jeep and the Superfortress has had more mention than the LST. They're in every newsreel.

High-pressure publicity is the archetypical American art. Naturally our fighting men want credit when it is due for themselves and their machines. Let us all try to keep them happy with their names in the papers, so they can keep their minds on the war.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Strange and often terrible crimes involving young women are occuring allover the country, and a frightening batch here. Mary Barrett, a pretty redhead, was going to her neighborhood delicatessen when a strange man walked up, hit her on the head for no reason, and then ran away. When caught, he said his name was Avidose Valissoriou (a likely story!) and also that he didn't know why he had socked Mary. On the lighter side was the adventure of Ronnie Rogers, a booful blonde professional model. Bill Cassidy, small and 18, who lives on the floor below, decided he wanted most of anything to kiss Ronnie, but he made the mistake of climbing in at her bedroom window at night. Bill kissed her all right, but he also got pinched, and while the generous Miss Rogers refused to press a complaint in court, the judge insisted on holding amorous Willie on a burglary charge . . . Our Eleanor Greenspan did a nice thing this week. Arrested for driving her unregistered car through a Jersey town the other day, the judge suspended sentence when she promised to register the can immediately. The happy Eleanor, remarking "I sure thought I was going to jail!" gave $25 to the Red Cross.

WHAT'S THE IDEA?—Designer Pauline Trigere highlighted her collection of fall clothes by showing us a brassiere consisting of nothing but shiny gold sequins. And some of it will be visible, too, when it is worn with a long evening suit of brown dull satin. Just the same, that beauteous shiny bra will be a terrible temptation to the more daring young ladies of the town.

ELINOR'S NEW JOB—Elinor Guthrie McVickar, who is one of the prettiest girls in the local fashion mob, has quit her job as beauty editor of Harper's Bazaar to become the advertising manager of the Dorothy Gray Laboratories. Certainly is smart for a cosmetics house to hire the loveliest girl available to front for its products! . . . So Kate the Great Cornell is going to act for the soldiers, too. She and Brian Aherne are going to head a company which will play her greatest stage hit, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" for the troops overseas. Her husband and producer, Guthrie McClintic, is going to play in the show, too.
