

Colorado Springs, Colo.

Monument Valley Park is a unique strip of Park abounding in typical western shrubbery which follows the course of Monument Creek for over 2 miles, seldom being more than two or three blocks in width. There are no drives but graveled walks make it a delightful strolling place. Two or three pretty lakes are tucked away in its hollows and thru its foliage may be seen many fine views of Pikes Peak and the mountains.

The Spa of the Rockies

Manitou lies in a pocket among the hills a few miles west of Colorado Springs. The slopes on all sides are dotted with cottages and scenic trips radiate from it in all directions through the narrow cañons. Several noted mineral springs are situated there, valuable for their curative properties. In summertime Manitou is crowded with visitors occupying every nook and corner of the town, the tourist is king and Manitou might well be called Colorado's most highly developed summer resort.

582—Tower of Babel
from the Road through the North End of the Garden of the Gods

Garden of the Gods, Colorado

2A39-N

In 1931 a new road was built that circles thru the north end of the Garden of the Gods, making popular a spot that was little visited before. The principal view is that of the north Gate Rock which is called from that angle the Tower of Babel.
