Extract: "Samuel Foulke, a grandson of Edward through his son Hugh, served in the Pennsylvania Colonial Assembly from 1761 through 1768. Portions of a journal kept by Samuel reveal that he thought it no "remarkable" occurrence to receive mail from Benjamin Franklin, and even less so to meet with him on New Year's Eve of 1763."

Extract: "While our county was faithful to the cause of independence, a considerable minority of her population remained loyal to the crown. When the war became inevitable, Bucks was one of the first counties to act. the 9th of July, 1774, Joseph Hart, John Kidd, Joseph Kirkbride, James Wallace, Henry Wynkoop, Samuel Foulke, and John Wilkinson were appointed to represent Bucks at a meeting of all the county committees to be held in Philadelphia, where Mr Hart was chairman of the committee that reported in favor of 'a congress of deputies from all the colonies.'"

Extract: "At the outbreak of the Revolution he and his brothers, John, Thomas, and Theophilus, signed the Oath of Allegiance to the Colonies as prescribed by the Pennsylvania Assembly. This was deemed an offense against the principles of Friends by other members of the monthly meeting, and the four brothers were disowned from membership. However, he continued to sit at the head of the meeting and acted as clerk during the whole period, and did much to hold the patriotic Quakers back from active participation in war-like measures while giving their allegiance to the patriot cause in accordance with what he conceived to be conformity to the laws of the state."

Notes: 1781 - disowned in Richland m.m. for taking Oath of Allegiance to the Colonies - [Footnote #2]: others "including his brothers John, Thomas and Theophilus - along with nephew Everard. It is said that this disciplinary procedure could only be accomplished with help from other meetings, directed from Philadelphia, and that Samuel Foulke, who had for many years sat 'at the head of the Meeting' continued to do so to his death."
